

January 1, 2026

Keagen Trost
Missouri
Right Tackle
Height: 6040	Weight: 316	Year: 7SR	Jersey #:79	Hometown: Kankakee, IL
Games Reviewed: 2025 Texas A&M, Mississippi State, Oklahoma, Arkansas
2025 Stats:
Career Stats:
Scouting Report by: Danny Nolan

Critical Factors
Reactive Athleticism		Anchor/Play Strength		Body Control
6		7		5
Positional Factors
Run Block	Pass Block	Awareness	Footwork	2nd Level	Range
8	6	5	6	8	5
Hand Use	Power	Sustain	Finish	Flexibility	Toughness
5	7	6	5	4	5

Strengths

- Making impact blocks at the second level
- Anchor ability
- Sustaining blocks at the line of scrimmage

Weaknesses

- Finishing blocks with intent
- Fighting off strong hands
- Habit of lunging out of position

Overall

24-year-old Keagen Trost is a right tackle in Missouri's zone-heavy system. For certain plays, he acts as an extra lineman on the left side, so the team feels comfortable with him in that role on occasion. He has been a full-time starter for the Tigers this season, and he has plenty of experience outside of Missouri. He began his collegiate career in 2019 at Morgan State, starting in two of four games played. He then spent four seasons at Indiana State, where he played in 22 games, 13 as a starter. Last year, he played in 12 games at Wake Forest, starting all but one. While his frame doesn't stand out amongst his OL peers, Trost is strong as an ox, and that forcefulness drives his play on the field. He brings an adequate motor to the line but nothing remarkable.

Pass Game

With the ball in the air, Trost is a reliable protector for his quarterback. He uses his strength to neutralize edge rushers who attempt to beat him with power, keeping a wide pocket for the passer. He is more susceptible to speed but only slightly so, as he has the quickness and footwork to match most blitzers. His biggest weakness in the pass game likely stems from his hand use. He sometimes initiates contact too high on his defender, and a rusher with strong hands can shed him. He has no issue recognizing and picking up stunts, though his improvisational blocking once a play breaks down could be an area of improvement. At the snap, he gets great jumps off the line of scrimmage. He is very intentional with his footwork but almost looks robotic, preparing for a speed or power rush around the outside. If he is out of position, he has to rely on sheer strength to make the block instead of being agile enough to recover. It's not the biggest problem because he is so strong, but better body control would be nice.

Run Game

On the ground, Trost is a true mauler. He can seal an edge or move a defender easily. His greatest strength is working up to the second level. After impacting the play via combo block, he excels at working upfield and eliminating a linebacker or safety from the play. This leads to those chunk gains that offenses covet. He sustains blocks well at the line of scrimmage, but has trouble doing it at the second level. He sports adequate range, wowing no one with his speed but getting to the spots he needs to. Missouri almost never used him as a puller, but he wouldn't be a liability. Just don't expect anything remarkable. Surprisingly, Trost's power doesn't lead to many pancake blocks. His finishing ability could use work, as could his overall toughness.

Last Word

Trost has thrived as a right tackle, and there are certainly reasons to believe he could stick there at the next level. Based on his size and strength, he also projects to be an asset at guard. Thanks to his age and potential versatility, Trost could make an impact from the jump in the NFL. To accentuate his power and hide concerns about his fluidity, he would fit best in zone blocking schemes.

One-Liner: A late bloomer with no shortage of college experience, Trost pairs an NFL-ready body with polished skills in the run and pass game.

Grade: 6.8 - Ceiling: 7.0 (10%) Floor: 6.2 (20%) Round: 6