

November 13, 2025

Chamon Metayer
Arizona St.
Y-Tight End
Height: 6040	Weight: 255	Year: 5SR	Jersey #: 7	Hometown: North Miami, FL
Games Reviewed: 2025 TCU, Texas Tech, Utah, Iowa St.
2025 Stats:
Career Stats:
Scouting Report by: Danny Nolan

Critical Factors
Blocking Ability		Receiving Ability		FBI
7		4		6
Positional Factors
Run Block	Pass Block	Play Strength	Play Speed	Mismatch	Release
7	6	7	6	5	3
Catching Skills	Separation	Run After Catch	Clutch	Toughness	ST Value
5	4	5	5	7	5

Strengths

- Opening lanes in the ground game
- Initiating contact during blocks
- Sustaining and finishing blocks

Weaknesses

- Release off the line of scrimmage
- Generating separation on routes
- Instincts as a receiver

Overall

Standing 6'4", 255 lbs, Chamon Metayer is an imposing Y-Tight End for the Arizona State Sun Devils. He spends most of his time lined up as a tight end, but he also has experience in the slot and in the backfield as a fullback. On an Arizona State team that plays primarily 11 or 12 personnel, Metayer is always on the field. He has started in all 9 games this season for the Sun Devils and was a starter last season as well. For his career, Metayer has played in 40 total games and started 28 of them. He spent three seasons with Cincinnati before transferring to Arizona State. He was a standout two-sport athlete in high school, starring in both football and basketball. Metayer is a big, physical bruiser who excels at playing with toughness and initiating contact. He's not the fastest, but he moves well for a player his size. He possesses all the physical qualities teams look for in a Y-TE.

Pass Game

In the pass game, Metayer best functions as a safety blanket. His speed is good and his hands are sufficient, but a poor release and subpar route-running skills will hold him back at the next level. Although he can make contested catches, shielding defenders with his large frame, Metayer is prone to a bad drop every once and awhile. He doesn't always look the most fluid with the ball in his hands, yet he is fast enough and strong enough to accumulate yards after the catch and break tackles. Metayer is reliable when pass blocking, as he dominates blitzing linebackers and routinely wins against defensive ends.

Run Game

The ground game is where Metayer excels. He throws his weight around with a combination of tenacity and smarts that make him akin to an extra offensive lineman. At the point of attack, Metayer is aggressive, launching himself at his man and showing no fear of contact. He has a feel for the design of the run play and can leverage his defender accordingly. Blocking in space isn't his forte, but he has the athleticism to get up to the second level or outside towards the sideline. He's more likely to get beaten in these instances, but still wins a good portion of the time.

Last Word

Metayer's blocking ability will certainly translate to the professional stage, and teams would love to have him as a blocker, regardless of scheme. The question for Metayer is whether he can provide enough production through the air to carve out a major role. He has the physical tools to do so, he just needs more polish as a receiver. It won't be absolutely necessary for him to come out of the game on 3rd down, but it's likely that an NFL team will have better pass-catching options. Metayer has collegiate experience on special teams and could fare well on punts and kicks. Improving his speed could make him a top-tier contributor in that area.

One-Liner: Metayer's toughness and violence as a blocker make him a coveted option at the TE position despite his significant limitations in quickness and separation

Grade: 6.5 - Ceiling: 6.7 (10%) Floor: 5.8 (35%) Round: UDFA