

January 8, 2026

| Cash Jones                                                       |             |           |              |                     |
|------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------|-----------|--------------|---------------------|
| Georgia                                                          |             |           |              |                     |
| Running Back                                                     |             |           |              |                     |
| Height: 5110                                                     | Weight: 195 | Year: 5SR | Jersey #: 32 | Hometown: Brock, TX |
| Games Reviewed: 2025 Texas, Charlotte, Alabama, Ole Miss (CFP)   |             |           |              |                     |
| 2025 Stats: 13 carries, 15 yards, 20 receptions, 195 yards, 1 TD |             |           |              |                     |
| Career Stats:                                                    |             |           |              |                     |
| Scouting Report by: Danny Nolan                                  |             |           |              |                     |

| Critical Factors   |                 |                     |
|--------------------|-----------------|---------------------|
| Vision             | Contact Balance | Passing Game Impact |
| 4                  | 4               | 6                   |
| Positional Factors |                 |                     |
| Play Speed         | Elusiveness     | Power               |
| 6                  | 5               | 4                   |
| Playmaker          | Catching Skill  | Pass Pro            |
| 5                  | 5               | 5                   |
| Ball Security      | Toughness       | ST Value            |
| 5                  | 5               | 5                   |

Strengths

- Reliable checkdown option
- High IQ in pass protection
- Ability to make plays in space

Weaknesses

- Polish as a ball carrier
- Physicality in run game
- Strength in pass protection

Overall

From Brock, Texas, Cash Jones is a fifth-year senior running back for the Georgia Bulldogs. Jones has spent his whole career in Athens, playing in 54 games and starting one this season. He is used more for his skills in the pass game than in the run, as he has more catches than carries in 2025. It follows, then, that Jones has a slighter build than the average running back. His 195-lb frame lends itself to a more elusive play style than a bruising one. Jones brings adequate toughness to the gridiron. He'll fight for extra yards but won't punish defenders while doing so.

Run Game

Jones is not an exciting prospect in the run game. He seldom received handoffs at Georgia and mustered little production on the carries he did get. He lacks the strength to consistently break tackles, especially those from defenders in the box. He profiles best as an east-to-west scatback, but his vision and change of direction are unimpressive, making him unable to manufacture big plays on his own. His elusiveness is sufficient, as he can slip away from defenders at times. However, those instances are more a result of a high motor than an outstanding juke or fantastic footwork. If he can elude a defender, he possesses speed good enough for a chunk gain but not quite at the level of a true home-run-hitter. He recognizes angles well and uses them to his advantage, allowing him to gain some additional yardage.

Pass Game

With the ball in the air, Jones transforms from afterthought to chess piece. He excels at catching passes out of the backfield and routinely had his number called on screen passes with the Bulldogs. He functions as a great checkdown option with sure hands and an acute sense of where he should be. Receiving the ball in space highlights Jones's athletic strengths and masks his inability to operate between the tackles. He is not a reliable downfield option and his receiving skills are limited to the short passing game. Jones is intelligent in pass protection and thus a weapon on third down. His ability to recognize a blitz is impressive, and he is always willing to make a block. Unfortunately, his small frame and lack of power make him less effective in pass protection than expected from someone with his football IQ.

Last Word

At the next level, Jones projects to be a depth piece who sees most of his offensive usage on third down. He will do best in a scheme that gets him in space outside the tackles. On early downs, teams will have an option more viable than Jones, but if he gets stronger, he could prove to be an asset on third downs. Jones returned a few kickoffs for Georgia in 2024 but was not used in that role in 2025. Thus, he could be used in a pinch as a returner in the pros, but it's more likely that he would morph into a solid special teamer in other roles.

One-Liner: Jones won't provide much value as a rusher, so his talents as a receiver and in pass protection will be his best chance at cracking an NFL roster.

Grade: 5.5 - Ceiling: 5.9 (5%) Floor: 5.4 (35%) Round: UDFA