

November 27, 2025

Luke Altmeyer
Illinois
Quarterback
Height: 6020	Weight: 205	Year: 5SR	Jersey #: 9	Hometown: Starkville, MS
Games Reviewed: 2025 Indiana, USC, Ohio State, Maryland
2025 Stats:
Career Stats:
Scouting Report by: Danny Nolan

Critical Factors
Accuracy		Decision Making/Mental		Clutch Performance
5		5		5
Positional Factors
Short Accuracy	Deep Accuracy	Pocket Aware	Footwork	Under Pressure	Mobility
5	4	6	6	5	7
Arm Strength	Release	Awkward Throw	Eye Discipline	Leadership	Body Comp
5	5	4	4	6	5

Strengths

- Ability to extend plays
- Toughness
- Efficiency on RPOs and read option

Weaknesses

- Telegraphing passes
- Deep ball arm strength
- Playmaking ability

Overall

Luke Altmeyer is the starting quarterback and a team captain for the Illinois Fighting Illini. He operates primarily out of the shotgun, and the Illinois offense implements plenty of RPOs. Altmeyer began his career at Ole Miss, spending two seasons there. He played in 9 games, starting 1. In 2023, he transferred to Illinois, and he has started all 33 games he has participated in since then. Altmeyer missed the final three games of the 2023 season with a head injury but has had no injury issues over the past two years. Altmeyer doesn't have an imposing frame, but he plays with toughness and grit. He has the athleticism to be a threat on the ground and would rather fight for the extra yard than skirt out of bounds.

Pass Game

Through the air, Altmeyer provides serviceable production. He doesn't have one trait that can carry him to elite status, but he can do most things well enough to keep an offense rolling. He looks comfortable executing RPOs, leading to many quick-hitting throws. His accuracy on short passes is sufficient and he puts good zip on the ball. He can fall into a tendency to throw behind receivers cutting across the middle of the field, and he cannot throw a blanketed receiver open. Similarly, Altmeyer needs his receivers to win matchups on deep balls for him to complete passes. Deep shots are often underthrown because Altmeyer doesn't have the strength to push it downfield. For the most part, Altmeyer makes good decisions in the pocket. He finds open receivers and doesn't run unnecessary risks. He may fall victim to a well-designed defensive scheme or the occasional mental lapse. Altmeyer is gifted when it comes to extending plays. He can worm his way out of tackles and looks comfortable rolling outside the pocket. However, he often holds onto the ball too long in the hopes of buying an extra second. He's not afraid to take a hit if he needs to, despite his smaller build. He has room to improve his ability to throw off-balance and on the run. Altmeyer is a decent clutch performer. He won't wilt under pressure, but he can't elevate his team the way the best QBs can.

Run Game

On the ground, Altmeyer is an underrated asset. He is a threat to pull the ball on a read option and take off. He isn't faster than the average linebacker or edge rusher, but he can win a race to the outside if he has the angle. He doesn't have the size to strike fear into defenders and teams won't want him taking too many hits. Altmeyer probably shouldn't be getting more than 5 or 6 designed runs per game. He doesn't have that gamebreaking rushing ability but can consistently pick up chunk gains. He likes to try and break a tackle instead of giving himself up, which his teammates undoubtedly love but his coaches surely can't stand.

Last Word

At the next level, Altmeyer projects to be a circumstantial starter with sufficient traits all around. He won't be an elite talent, but his team could find success with a well-constructed roster. Altmeyer plays an inspiring brand of football, as he shows guts in the pocket and fearlessness as a rusher. If the lapses in accuracy and decision-making can be eliminated, Altmyer can be a good leader on the gridiron. His overall arm talent, however, will prevent him from entering the upper echelon of NFL quarterbacks.

One-Liner: Altmyer, deftly mobile but not a scrambler, is a jack-of-all-trades quarterback who lacks the calling card to make him great at the professional level.

Grade: 6.3 - Ceiling: 6.5 (10%) Floor: 5.8 (30%) Round: 7