

December 18, 2025

Silas Walters
Miami OH
Strong Safety
Height: 6010	Weight: 198	Year: 5SR	Jersey #: 29	Hometown: West Chester, OH
Games Reviewed: 2024 Ball State, 2025 Northern Illinois, Akron, Eastern Michigan
2025 Stats:
Career Stats:
Scouting Report by: Danny Nolan

Critical Factors
3-Level Impact	FBI/Instincts	Play Speed
4	7	5
Positional Factors
Man Coverage	Zone Coverage	Range
5	6	5
Ball Skills/Tracking	Tackling	Blitz
5	5	4
Physicality	Communication	ST Value
5	6	7

Strengths

- Relentless motor
- Instincts in zone coverage
- Ability to “captain” a defense

Weaknesses

- Strength
- Impact as deep safety
- Over-the-top range

Overall

Silas Walters is a senior defensive back for the Miami OH RedHawks. A versatile chess piece for a coaching staff, he projects best as a strong safety, though he has spent most of the 2025 season as a slot cornerback. Walters has also seen time in the box acting as a linebacker. Since 2022, he has played in 51 games and started 17, all with Miami. He has appeared in 10 games this year, starting 7. Walters suffered a right hamstring injury that sidelined him for a couple games, but he was able to return for the rest of the season. Walters has solid height for his position but would do well to add mass to his frame. Though he may be slimmer than most safeties, he doesn't play like it. Walters never shies away from a tackle and loves to get his hands dirty.

Pass Game

In the pass game, Walters' best trait is his feel for the game. In zone coverage, he always seems to be in the right spot, taking away passing lanes as if he has eyes in the back of his head. He excels in the short and intermediate areas of the field, utilizing good closing speed, communication, and football IQ to make an impact. He is less effective as a deep safety, as his range and ball skills are average at best. He can usually keep pace with a receiver coming off the line of scrimmage, but he doesn't have the speed to catch up to one that's already gathered a head of steam. In man coverage, Walters may struggle against an extremely quick or physical pass-catcher. However, he can mirror most receivers for the first few seconds of a play, especially when defending a short route. He is more vulnerable against fades than he is against slants or curls. He has almost no experience lining up out wide, so he will likely be used best as a slot cornerback or a safety crashing into the intermediate region of the field. Unless he comes in untouched, Walters is a nonfactor as a blitzer. A lineman or tight end can easily neutralize a rush attempt.

Run Game

Walters' mentality in the run game is a coach's dream. He doesn't hesitate to get involved in a mess around the line of scrimmage, and he plays with the toughness of a linebacker. Unfortunately, he lacks the strength to consistently back up his tenacity. He can make most open-field, 1-on-1 tackles, but will fall victim to the occasional broken tackle against a stronger ball carrier. If he is being blocked, the likelihood of him immediately breaking free is slim. His high motor does make it hard for an offensive player to sustain a block, and he never gives up on a play.

Last Word

At the next level, Walters projects as a slot corner-safety hybrid whose primary usage should come on nickel or dime packages. He will be utilized best within 15 yards of the line of scrimmage, and he shouldn't be consistently relied upon to provide the last line of defense. He will likely be most valuable on 3rd downs, but teams would be remiss to neglect his high-octane motor in running situations. Without exceptional speed, Walters' ceiling on special teams is capped, though his toughness and tenacity should set a high floor and make him an immediate asset in that department.

One-Liner: Walters is an instinctual defender who brings grit and tenacity to the field, but he needs to continue his development as an athlete to stick with NFL competition.

Grade: 5.8 - Ceiling: 6.4 (15%) Floor: 5.4 (20%) Round: UDFA