

October 30, 2025

Trey White
San Diego State
Edge Rusher
Height: 6020	Weight: 245	Year: 4JR	Jersey #: 2	Hometown: San Diego, CA
Games Reviewed: 2025 Washington State, Cal, Colorado State, Fresno State
2025 Stats:
Career Stats:
Scouting Report by: Danny Nolan

Critical Factors
Pass Rush Ability		1st Step Explosion		POA/Set Edge
6		4		5
Positional Factors
PR Repertoire	Bend	Hand Use	Play Strength	Range	Flat Coverage
5	5	5	5	7	5
Motor	FBI	Discipline	Tackling	Toughness	ST Value
6	6	6	7	6	6

Strengths

- Tackling
- Sideline-to-sideline range
- Speed in pass rush

Weaknesses

- Burst off the line of scrimmage
- Anchor ability in run game
- Containing the ball carrier inside

Overall

Junior Trey White is an EDGE in San Diego State's 4-3 scheme. He almost always lines up on the outside in a two-point stance, and he rarely drops into coverage. White is comfortable on the right or left but has no experience playing inside. A captain for the Aztecs, White has played in 33 games in his collegiate career, starting 16. He has started all but 4 games over his last two seasons. White's game is predicated on speed. He lacks elite first-step quickness but compensates with the ability to blow past offensive linemen. He is on the smaller side for his position, so his athleticism can be offset by his lack of size and strength. He shows solid toughness and is not one to give up on a play.

Pass Game

In the pass game, White sports serious upside. His speed is legit, and he has enough strength to get past the average tackle. Once he wins his matchup with speed, he opens the door for a variety of pass rush moves, many of which he is still developing. Early in the 2025 season, his speed rush was his only real weapon, but he has added more moves to his repertoire as the season has progressed. This growth has taken him from a one-trick pony to a force with game-wrecking ability. His bull rush is not good enough to win on its own, but when his blocker is worried about the speed, White's power can catch them off guard. The same can be said about his hand use and corresponding rush moves. White is effective in stunts that allow him to generate a head full of steam, allowing him to attack linemen laterally and free up lanes for his teammates. He is a nightmare for quarterbacks trying to scramble, as his plus speed and tenacity lead to many pressures outside the pocket. Thanks to his superb tackling ability, he is able to complete the play and bring the passer down once he gets there.

Run Game

White's impact against the run is not as significant. Despite solid hand use, he has trouble getting penetration and shedding blocks from bigger offensive linemen. When White does get off his block, however, he can rack up tackles, utilizing his motor and athleticism. He has the speed to chase down a running back who has reached the second level of the defense. His discipline on the field has positive and negative aspects. He does not focus on setting the edge, meaning that he is vulnerable to allowing the rusher around the outside. On the plus side, White performs his role well when he is the unblocked defender against read option. There, he is conservative and works hard to avoid biting on fakes. He might not make splashy plays behind the line of scrimmage, but he prevents the offense from ripping off long gains on the play fake.

Last Word

White projects as a low-end starter at the next level, with most of his utility coming in passing situations. He might struggle with consistency, seeming invisible for a few drives before making his presence felt in bunches. He could fit in either an even or odd man front, as long as he's standing up on the outside. While he's not a problem for a defense when in coverage, he should be used as a rusher for nearly every snap. Third down should be his strong suit, and he will likely function as a designated pass rusher in the NFL. Because of his speed and toughness, White has intriguing special teams potential, and he has some experience in that role as an Aztec.

One-Liner: White is an athletic speed rusher who has a knack for making tackles but lacks the tools in the run game to be a true three-down weapon.

Grade: 6.5 - Ceiling: 6.7 (20%) Floor: 5.9 (25%) Round: PFA